Laid to Rest.

Not in years has a single catastrophe saddened so many homes in Colorado as the terrible railroad accident at Eden, eight miles north of Pushlo, on Sunday night, Aug. 7. A realization of the Lorrors resultant apon the accident to the Denver & Rio Grande train searcely burst in its fullness upon Denver people until the funerals of the wreck victims were announced. Of the twelve or fourteen Denver people who lost their lives in the Eden wreck, six belonged to prominent Catholic families and the funerals of these took place from the churches here last week. The funeral corteges wending their way from the little churches on Thursday and Friday, going toward the cemetery, teld their own sad tale and were the inspiration of many prayers which arose from hearts over-burdened with grief.

Almost every funeral held fast week was from a church of one denomination or another, and religion offered consolation where all else was powerless to do so. Two Catholic churches were the same of funerals of wreck winting and these were crowded to the doors with sympathetic friends.

One of the saddest incidents of the wrock which has wrought such misters, was the taking away of the entire family, with the exception of one denomination of Edward P. Gartland. Mr. herty, assisted by Mrs. J. Thams, Miss Anna Byrnes of Lead, S. D., arrived in Butte this week, and will visit with her parents and others.

Monday morning brought the intelligence that the entire party had been lost with upwards of eighty other paysengers in the wreck at Eden. The distracted father took a special train and started to the scene of the catastrophe to aid in recovering the bodies. Almost mad with grief, he led an individual searching party and, never relaxing his vigilance for over thirty hours, he found the body of his wife and two of the children. They were Edward P. Garriland, ir., aged 12, and the only dangither of the family Lillian, a child of T. Throughout another night the grief-crazed father sought in vain for the remaining children and then came to Denver to attend the burial services of the others. For two days the friends of the family came to view the remains, and then on Friday the service was held at St. Dominic's church.

Long before the hour set for the service, the church was thronged with relativest and friends, and when the funeral procession moved up the center aisle there was not a vacant seat and many stood with bowed heads in the back of the church. Interesting Sketch of General Patrick A. Collins o the Hub.

Patrick A. Collins of Boston, who was permanent chairman of the convention which gave Cleveland his second nomination, and who took a promine in the recent convention at St. Louis, has had an eventful career, writes a daily press correspondent. When the Marquis of Ripon visited the Massachusetts state capital in the spring of 1871 he sat down alongside of a heard-less youngster in the corner of one of the leather sofas. The august Canadian governor general entered into conver-sation with the bright-faced youngster, who smiled quizzically as he replied to the condescending overtures. His lord-ship somehow got the notion that he ship somehow got the notion that he was talking to a page and he made the impression known in some way.

"But I am a senator," the young man eard, with a smile.

"What?" said the marquis, with a surprise that half a dozen exclamation points would not express.

"I am a senator elected by a Boston district," Collins repeated.

"Were you born here in the city, too?" said the marquis.
"No."

"No."

"Where then?"

"In the island next to yours," with a sharp look and a laugh in his eye. The marquis laughed heartily, too, and he remembered Patrick A. Collins' name and face, when the two men met in England a few summers later Collins had a warm welcome from the man who took him for a page in the state senate. Three years before he met the marquis, Collins was a foreman in a big upholstery shop. He was then 24 years of age, and had worked himself up through the usual grades from an apprentice. He landed in Boston when only 4 years old, and lived for a time in Ohio, where he got some schooling, and worked at farming and coal mining. He was 17 when he returned to Boston and apprenticed himself to his trade. Ever thrifty, he had $1,166 in bank when 24 years old. That was the time his friends took to elect him to the legislature, and he at the same time matriculated as a law student at Harvard. He was in the civil same time matriculated as a law stu-dent at Harvard. He was in the civil war served in the house two years, and then, in 1876, was promoted to the and then, in 1876, was promoted to the senate, the youngest man who has litherto attained that dignity. With the adjournment of the senate in 1871 he swung his law shingle to the breezes and kept on making friends and business from the start. Since then he has been a member of congress, consul general in London and mayor of Boston.
